RESEARCH

War Memory and Nationalism: A Conjoint Experiment

June 2023 - Present

Supervised by Dr. Lu Zhang

- Based on a review of work by Anderson, Billig, Guibernau and others' work, proposed the following novel research question: How does collective war memory and social media framing influence nationalist sentiment in contemporary China?
- Designed a survey experiment using image-based conjoint analysis to address potential measurement biases highlighted in previous studies.
- Under Dr. Lu Zhang's guidance, developed a detailed research proposal that was submitted as a term paper, which earned a score of 99 out of 100.

Early Political Communication Discourse Analysis of the CCP

February 2023 - April 2023

Supervised by Dr. Zijie Shao

- Developed a Python program for text encoding, addressing Excel's lag issues with large datasets. It calculates coder reliability using indices such as Holsti and Scott's Pi, facilitating coding work.
- Gathered and coded 1921-1949 documents from the Historical Documents on the Organization of the Communist Party of China (CCP) to create a primary-source database on early communications by the party.
- Used the PyTorch library in Python to train an NLP model, enabling the automatic encoding and classification of historical CCP texts from a linguistic perspective.

Long-term Strategy Research on Climate and Energy

April 2022 - October 2022

Supervised by Dr. Meian Chen

- Compiled energy data and policies from 23 provinces (2008-present) and contributed to the Closing the Emissions Gap through Subnational Climate Actions in China report and the China Carbon Neutrality Action database.
- Tracked news on clean energy data and the progress made in phasing out coal in several influential countries. Contributed to the Global Coal Phase-Out Progress Tracking Report.
